NEW QUESTION: 2

Typically, the statement "no one likes to estimate, because they know their estimate will be proven incorrect" is true. However, you have been given the challenge of estimating the costs for your nuclear reactor project. A basic assumption that you need to make early in this is_____

A. Whether the project has required delivery dates

B. How direct and indirect costs will be handled

C. If there will be a multiyear project budget

D. Whether or not experts will be available to assist you in this process

Answer: B

Explanation:

Explanation/Reference:

Explanation:

The scope statement, as part of the scope baseline, is a key input in the estimate costs process and should be reviewed. It provides the project description, acceptance criteria, key deliverables, boundaries, assumptions, and constraints about the project. It also notes one basic assumption that must be made as costs are estimated is whether the estimates will be limited only to direct project costs or whether they also will include indirect project costs.
