NEW QUESTION: 2

Which statement below is accurate about the reasons to implement a layered security architecture?

- A. A layered security approach is intended to increase the work-factor for an attacker.

B. A good packet-filtering router will eliminate the need to implement a layered security architecture.

C. A layered approach doesn't really improve the security posture of the organization.

D. A layered security approach is not necessary when using COTS products.

Answer: A

Explanation:

Security designs should consider a layered approach to address or protect against a specific threat or to reduce a vulnerability.

For example, the use of a packet-filtering router in conjunction with an application gateway and an intrusion detection system combine to increase the work-factor an attacker must expend to successfully attack the system.

The need for layered protections is important when commercial off-the-shelf (COTS) products are used. The current state-of-the-art for security quality in COTS products do not provide a high degree of protection against sophisticated attacks. It is possible to help mitigate this situation by placing several controls in levels, requiring additional work by attackers to accomplish their goals.
