A client has consented to have a central venous catheter placed. The best position in which to place the client is the Trendelenburg position. The reason is that the Trendelenburg position:

- A. Makes the procedure more comfortable for the client
- B. Reduces the possibility of hematoma formation
- C. Reduces the possibility of air embolism
- D. Allows the physician to visualize the subclavian vein

Answer: C

Explanation:

Explanation

(A) The subclavian vein is not visible during central line insertion regardless of the client's position. (B) The Trendelenburg position reduces the possibility of air embolism because it places slight positive pressure on the central veins. It also distends the veins, and distention facilitates insertion. (C) This response is untrue; it has no effect on hematoma formation. (D) This position is not necessarily more comfortable for the client, and many clients, especially those who may be short of breath, may find the position uncomfortable and difficult to maintain.
