Risks to an organization's image are referred to as what kind of risk?

- A. Financial
- B. Strategic
- C. Information
- D. Operational

Answer: B

Explanation:

Explanation/Reference:

Explanation:

Strategic risks are those risks which have potential outcome of not fulfilling on strategic objectives of the organization as planned. Since the strategic objective will shape and impact the entire organization, the risk of not meeting that objective can impose a great threat on the organization.

Strategic risks can be broken down into external and internal risks:

External risks are those circumstances from outside the enterprise which will have a potentially damaging or helpful impact on the enterprise. These risks include sudden change of economy, industry, or regulatory conditions. Some of the external risks are predictable while others are not. For instance, a recession may be predictable and the enterprise may be able to hedge against the dangers economically; but the total market failure may not as predictable and can be much more devastating.

Internal risks usually focus on the image or reputation of the enterprise. some of the risks that are involved in this are public communication, trust, and strategic agreement from stakeholders and customers.

NEW QUESTION: 2

Which of the following is NOT a strategic risk? A. A sudden change in the economy B. A change in the regulatory environment C. A change in the industry D. A change in the company's internal structure

A. A sudden change in the economy is a strategic risk because it can have a significant impact on the organization's ability to meet its strategic objectives.

B. A change in the regulatory environment is a strategic risk because it can have a significant impact on the organization's ability to meet its strategic objectives.

C. A change in the industry is a strategic risk because it can have a significant impact on the organization's ability to meet its strategic objectives.

D. A change in the company's internal structure is NOT a strategic risk because it is an internal risk that does not have a significant impact on the organization's ability to meet its strategic objectives.
