An administrator was asked to review user accounts. Which of the following has the potential to cause the MOST amount of damage if the account was compromised?

- A. An account that has not been logged into since creation

- B. A user account with administrative rights
- C. A single account shared by multiple users
- D. A password that has not changed in 180 days

Answer: B

Explanation:

A user account with administrative rights has the same rights as an administrator account on a computer.

An administrator account is a user account that lets you make changes that will affect other users.

Administrators can change security settings, install software and hardware, and access all files on the computer. Administrators can also make changes to other user accounts.

This compares to a standard user (non-administrative) account which has limited rights on a computer. For example, a standard user account cannot install software, cannot make system changes that would affect other users and cannot access other users' files.

Therefore, a compromised user account with administrative rights has the potential for the most damage.
