NEW QUESTION: 2

MC-LAG is only supported on network ports.

A. TRUE

B. FALSE

Answer: B

NEW QUESTION: 3

Which two statements about Inverse ARP are true? (Choose two.)

A. It supports static mapping.

B. It uses the same operation code as ARP.

C. It translates Layer 3 addresses to Layer 2 addresses.

D. It translates Layer 2 addresses to Layer 3 addresses.

E. It uses the same packet format as ARP.

F. It uses ARP stuffing.

Answer: D, E

Explanation:

Inverse Address Resolution Protocol (Inverse ARP or InARP) is used to obtain Network Layer addresses (for example, IP addresses) of other nodes from Data Link Layer (Layer 2) addresses. It is primarily used in Frame Relay (DLCI) and ATM networks, in which Layer 2 addresses of virtual circuits are sometimes obtained from Layer 2 signaling, and the corresponding Layer 3 addresses must be available before those virtual circuits can be used.

Since ARP translates Layer 3 addresses to Layer 2 addresses, InARP may be described as its inverse. In addition, InARP is implemented as a protocol extension to ARP: it uses the same packet format as ARP, but different operation codes.
