NEW QUESTION: 1

Which factor would be most influential in choosing multimode fiber optic connections over UTP?

- A. electromagnetic interference
- B. required distance
- C. cost
- D. signal attenuation
- E. required bandwidth

Answer: B

Explanation:

Explanation/Reference:

Explanation:

Cabling has several key characteristics, such as the physical connector, media type, and cable length.

Copper and fiber-optic cables are commonly used today.

Fiber-optic cabling allows for longer distances and is less prone to interference than copper cabling. The two main types of optical fiber are single-mode and multi-mode. Copper cabling is widely available, costs less, and generally covers shorter distances (up to 100 meters, about 328 feet). Typical copper cabling found in the data center is CAT 5e/CAT 6 with RJ-45 connectors.

NEW QUESTION: 2

Upgrading a kernel involves which of the following tasks (choose all that apply):

- A. conducting a system reboot

- B. compiling the kernel and modules
- C. configuring the desired modules
- D. installing the kernel image

Answer: A,B,C,D

Explanation:

Upgrading the kernel involves configuring desired modules, compiling the kernel and modules, and finally installing the kernel image. This is followed by a system reboot (with fingers crossed!) to load the new kernel. All of this is documented in the ``README'' file which comes with each kernel package. Further information can be found in the ``Documentation/'' subdirectory. A particularly helpful file there is ``Configure.help'' which contains detailed information on the available kernel compile options and modules.
