Linear programming is an example of _____ project selection method.

- A. constrained optimization models
- B. Random choice method

- C. Benefit measurement
- D. Optimistic random method

Answer: A

Explanation:

constrained optimization models is a mathematical model to select project. The main techniques that have been proposed for solving constrained optimization problems are reduced-gradient methods, linear programming and quadratic programming methods. All are mathematical model. These types of models are in use only in certain types of projects and are not going to be used for simpler projects.

Answer: B

NEW QUESTION: 4

On February 9, Brown, CPA, expressed an unqualified opinion on the financial statements of Web Co. On October 9, during a peer review of Brown's practice, the reviewer informed Brown that engagement personnel failed to perform a search for subsequent events for the Web engagement. Brown should first:

- A. Inquire of Web whether there are persons currently relying, or likely to rely, on the financial statements.
- B. Request Web's permission to perform substantive procedures that would provide a satisfactory basis for the opinion.
- C. Take no additional action because subsequent events have no effect on the financial statements that were reported on.
- D. Assess the importance of the omitted procedures to Brown's present ability to support the opinion.

Answer: D

Explanation:

Explanation/Reference:

Explanation:

Choice "D" is correct. If an omitted audit procedure is discovered, the auditor should assess the importance of the omitted procedure to the auditor's ability to support the opinion. It might be the case that other audit procedures tended to compensate for the omitted procedure, in which case no further action would be necessary.

Choice "A" is incorrect. The auditor would only request permission to perform substantive procedures if no other procedures compensated for the missing one, and if there were persons relying (or likely to rely) on the financial statements.

Choice "B" is incorrect. The auditor would need to determine whether there were persons relying (or likely to rely) on the financial statements, but this would not be done unless it had already been determined that no other audit procedures compensated for the missing one.

Choice "C" is incorrect. If the omitted audit procedure impairs the auditor's ability to support the opinion, no other procedures compensated for the missing one, and there were persons relying (or likely to rely) on the financial statements, the auditor would need to apply substantive procedures. Taking no action would not be an acceptable response. Reporting on Other Information
